

Writing Workshops & Residencies

Heather Severson is an award-winning writer, educator and gypsy scholar, plying her craft wherever adults gather for self-development and education. She has worked with the National Writing Project, the Southern Arizona Writing Project, the University of Arizona, Pima Community College, University of Phoenix, the Educational Testing Services, the Alliance for Young Artists and Writers, the American Red Cross, Girl Scouts of America, and the Professional Association of Diving Instructors.

She specializes in developmental reading and writing, with forays into sustainability, eremology, outdoor education and SCUBA diving.

To support her habits in teaching and teacher education, Heather is a freelance education writer. She is the owner of StudioGraphia, LLC, a freelance writers' cooperative that provides services in writing, editing, instruction, research and design. She has written supplemental online content, instructor manuals, curriculum, and textbook reviews for Bedford/St. Martins, Cengage Learning, McGraw-Hill Higher Education, Pearson, Wadsworth, and other publishers for almost fifteen years.

Heather's formal writing practice began with diaries and journals written at the feet of her scholarly grandfather. After enduring a long, dark, night of the soul brought on by severe illness and physical rehabilitation, Heather reemerged into her community with a renewed focus and dedication to sharing the benefits of journal writing. Her current efforts are focused on publishing a memoir about some of her early experiences in education—the lessons she should NOT have learned in school.
